Q: What marine life can I expect to see at the resort?

A: Centara Grand Island Resort & Spa Maldives features an excellent house reef. The entire island is surrounded by some of the most astonishing marine life and coral found in the Maldives with just a few steps from your villa, or a short swim from the beach. Take the time to discover this amazing marine world!

Some of the fabulous species that you might see when snorkelling the house reef include:

Anemone fish

Belongs to the Damsel fishes family of which at least 50 species can be found around the Maldives, they secrete a protective mucus covering over their bodies which allows them to live a symbiotic (Beneficial to both parties) relationship with anemones. They can be identified by white horizontal lines on the body. Anemone species like to live in a spot where they are rarely seen by others.

Angelfish

14 species have been found around the Maldives. They are one of the smallest reef fish and being diurnal which can be found in many colours at snorkelling depths. Most of them feed on a diet consisting of algae and small invertebrates. They look similar to butterfly fish but have a more prominent spine at the lower corner of their gills.

Parrotfish

23 species can be found around the Maldives which are the most abundant and easily recognisable due to their large size and bright colours. By eating algae and hard coral, they play an important role in reef building and they also feed upon sea grasses and invertebrates. Adult parrotfish can be seen either on the shallow reef flats or nearby the reef edge.

Surgeon Fish

30 species can be found around the Maldives including sub-species of unicorn fish. Easily identifiable by their shape and colour, they are commonly found on the reefs where they graze the bottom algae. The juvenile ones tend to be less colourful, smaller in size and live solitary.

Honeycomb Moray Eel

Honeycomb Moray Eel is a fish with a long tapering tail, a shortened head, a blunt snout with powerful teeth. Dark blotches, surrounded by a yellow network, formed in the shape of a honeycomb give this species its name. The blotches vary in size between individuals depending upon their habitat. The honeycomb Moray Eel is usually found in dark holes and deep coral caves and rocky reefs and can grow to as long as two metres in length.

Saddles Puffer Fish

The saddled Puffer fish is one of the most easily identifiable puffer fish. Its unique colour and pattern makes it stand out even among the colourful coral reefs and gives ample warning to any potential predators. The adults Saddled Puffer fish usually swim in pairs, while the juveniles swim alone and stay in the shelter of the reefs. This species can grow up to a length of 10 cm.

White Lined Lionfish

The dark general colour with thin white lines makes it easier to identify the white-lined Lionfish. Found in areas with no or little hard coral growth, the White-Lined Lionfish prefers a habitat of dead coral areas having algae or other non-stinging type of growth. Armed with poisonous barbs and quills, it is well-equipped to protect itself from predators. It is usually found in depth of around 25 metres in caves along the sloped step of the reef. The size of a fully-grown White-Lined Lionfish can be up to 20 cm.

Whale Sharks

The Whale Shark is probably one of the most unique species of fish. Most would assume that they are from the shark family due to their name and features; however, the Whale shark is a slow-moving filter feeding shark that is the largest living fish species. It can grow up to 12.2 metres in length and weigh up to 13.6 tonnes. They are found in the tropical and warm oceans and can live up to 70 years. These species are thought to have originated about 60 million years ago. Although whale sharks have very large mouth, they feed mainly, though not exclusively, on plankton, microscopic plants and animals.

Despite its enormous size, this species does not pose any significant danger to humans. It is a frequently cited example when educating the public about the popular misconceptions of all sharks as “man-eaters”. They are actually quite gentle and can be playful with divers. Divers and snorkellers can swim with this giant fish without any risk apart from unintentionally being struck by the shark’s large tail fin.

Rays and Sharks

Over the years, sharks have earned a reputation as fierce killers of the sea but these thoughts are mainly misconceptions as they are just another type of fish. Sharks and rays have a body made entirely of cartilage.

A shark’s primary sense is its smell along with good colour eyesight which allow them to detect blood from a wounded fish over 0.4 km away. Jellyfish fluid-filled canals on their head allow them to sense the small amounts of electricity emitted by other animals such as the vibrations from a fish as it moves through the water. A very amazing animal as you can see!

White-tip Reef, Grey Reef and Silvertip Sharks are most likely the “largest seen” sharks in the area, reaching lengths of up to 180 cm. Active mainly at night they can be observed resting on the sandy bottom of the ocean during the day resting in preparation for the night hunting along the reef.

Hammerhead Shark

It will be one of the best breathtaking views if you spot the hammerhead shark as it is rare for this species to live in the Maldivian Ocean. Up to 4 metres in length, they feed on herring, mackerel and sardines and sometimes other sharks. Cruising along at gentle speed of 15 mph, maintaining a safe distance is best to be able to appreciate these awesome creatures.

Manta Rays

Rays can sometimes be spotted around the reef areas of the resort or at some dive locations.

Turtles

Three species inhabit the Maldives, Loggerhead, Green and Hawksbill Turtles. A bony shell protects their soft body underneath while paddle-like limbs allow for ease of movement in the water. Despite breathing air, they can slow their heartbeat enabling them to sleep underwater for several hours. Sadly, turtles today are threatened by human activities such as hunting and pollution. Discarded plastic bags are just one of the dangers turtles face daily.

Cetaceans

Around Centara you may see several species of dolphins including the Bottle nose Dolphin and the Common Dolphin. Being mammals, dolphins breathe air just like us and therefore are usually seen when they breach the surface to take a breath. They are also social animals and tend to be seen together in large pods as they hunt for pelagic fish school.
